

Hum 75. Selected Topics in Humanities - Topic: Environmental Justice. 6 units (2-0-4).

This seminar course will explore and discuss the unique intersection of environmental racism, environmental justice, and academia. Course material will primarily feature readings and videos on a case study-like basis and focus on bringing conversations typically had in social sciences, humanities and activism to the geosciences. Topics will center around two primary approaches: an “outward-facing” component that looks at environmental racism through the lens of various activisms, and an "inward-facing" component addressing the biases/malpractices broadly employed in the geosciences, as well as the apparent moral dilemmas of decisions involving multiple stakeholders. Taught concurrently with Ge/Bi/ESE 246.
